Neda Naser
Performance Artist and Movement Researcher

Born in Tehran, Iran, in December 1991.

I studied screenwriting at Karnameh Institute in Tehran and E&E at Aviation University. Before discovering contemporary dance, I explored different fields, including mathematics, writing, editing, and experimental photography. Although these experiences once seemed unrelated, contemporary dance helped me see connections between them and bring these interests together through art.

My Practice

My work explores the relationship between the movement, other bodies and way we behave in our daily life. Through choreography, participatory performance, and movement research, I explore how movement can become a way of thinking, learning, and asking questions.

I am interested in how agancy changes our movement, how we respond to uncertainty, and how our bodies relate to the spaces and social conditions we live in. In my practice, I pay attention to things such as weight, breathing, posture, and habitual gestures.

Rather than starting with a fixed story or a clear outcome, I create open situations where the work can develop through movement, attention, and the choices made by performers and participants.

Growing up and developing my practice in Iran, where access to contemporary dance education has been limited, I learned mainly through independent study and exchanges with other independent dance artists. This experience shaped the way I approach choreography: as a process of experimenting, observing, and discovering, rather than simply presenting a finished form.

Methods & Research

My process is based on trying things out, observing and documenting archives of my observation, and following questions that emerge along the way. Rather than planning every movement in advance, I allow the process to develop through practice and experimentation. I am interested in what happens when we change our usual ways of moving, behaving, paying attention, or relating to others.

I am currently part of an independent research group at Sayeh Dance Study Center in Tehran, where I work with dancers, choreographers, and performance artists. I am also interested in connecting movement research with other fields, including the social sciences, politics, visual art, and technology.

For me, choreography is not about providing answers. It is a way of exploring questions through the body.

Researcher

Tehran, Iran | Since 2024

We are a collective of fifteen dancers, choreographers, directors, and artists by a shared commitment to movement, dance, and choreographic research.

Our collective is a self-organized space for independent study, critical dialogue, and artistic experimentation. Our practice grows through personal research, embodied experience, collective discussions, and the exchange of diverse perspectives. Each member contributes their own background, questions, and methodologies, allowing our research to remain open, evolving, and interdisciplinary.

Our approach is centered on investigating contemporary theories, deconstructive performance practices, and recently published texts in the fields of choreography, performance and critical dance studies.

We believe that choreography is a way of thinking, perceiving, and engaging with the social, political, and cultural realities that shape our bodies and experiences.

WORKS

Matter and Another Form

Tehran, Iran | 2026

Matter and Another Form begins at a point that cannot yet be fully seen.
A force, a movement, or a change taking shape in the body and gradually revealing itself.

It explores the process through which movement shifts from something invisible into something tangible and visible. Here, the body is both the site where this process takes place and an agent and a questioner within it.

The performance functions as a laboratory for investigating movement before it becomes recognizable as movement, while sharing the practices and processes of this investigation with the audience.

Open State 0 - Choreographis score performance

Tehran, Iran | 2026

The work questions the relationship between instruction, choice, habit, and agency through the experience of the body.

Participants enter an empty space scattered with unmarked points. Each point contains a movement score, revealed only when the participant scans its QR-Code. There is no fixed path only a set of propositions that activate upon encounter.

Throughout a 1h performance, participants move between movement, stillness, observation, sound, waiting, and decision-making. After a while, the initial structure begins to shift in new rules and game.

Open State - Installation Performance

Tehran, Iran | 2026

https://shamis.gallery/neda-naser/

When we are faced with multiple possibilities, how do we choose? How do individual choices shape a collective situation? What drives us toward a possibility, or holds us back, and how does the body respond in such states?

Following an initial presentation of my work, Shamis Art Gallery provided an opportunity to explore the piece as an ongoing, non-durational process.

Open State is a participatory performance-installation that brings together a series of instructions, suggestions, and possibilities.

Yet no instruction or suggestion remains fixed. Each action can contradict a previous instruction; each choice can open up a new possibility, and any act of refusal or disruption can change the course of the situation.

Instructions gradually collide with one another, continuously emerge and contradict one another, generating new possibilities along the way.

Through bodily experience and collective presence, this performance-installation explores the relationships between instructions, choice, habit, agency, and disruption.

Make longed eye contact with the first person you encounter. If they avoid eye contact, follow them for a while.

Move on one leg only.

Do nothing.

Move the cube.

Call someone and have a very private conversation.

Move backwards for three minutes.

Stand in the center of the space and obstruct people's paths for a while.

Raise your hand whenever someone stops.

Take off your clothes. If you don't want to, scan QRcode-48.

Place the cube on your head and take four steps. If the cube falls off your head, scan number 11. Otherwise, choose someone and give them the cube.

Site Specific Performance

in Lalit kala Akademi - Dehli Collage of Art

Dehli, India | 2026

At the 20th International Art Carnival, 3 days international event featuring artists from across the world, I presented two site-specific, improvisation-based performances.

The first performance was a collaborative with Reiko from Japan, shaped through real-time negotiation between two bodies. Our bodies connected by threads and any movement effects on the other.

The second was a solo performance structured around audience interaction, allowing the work to continuously shift through collective presence and response.

We Are!

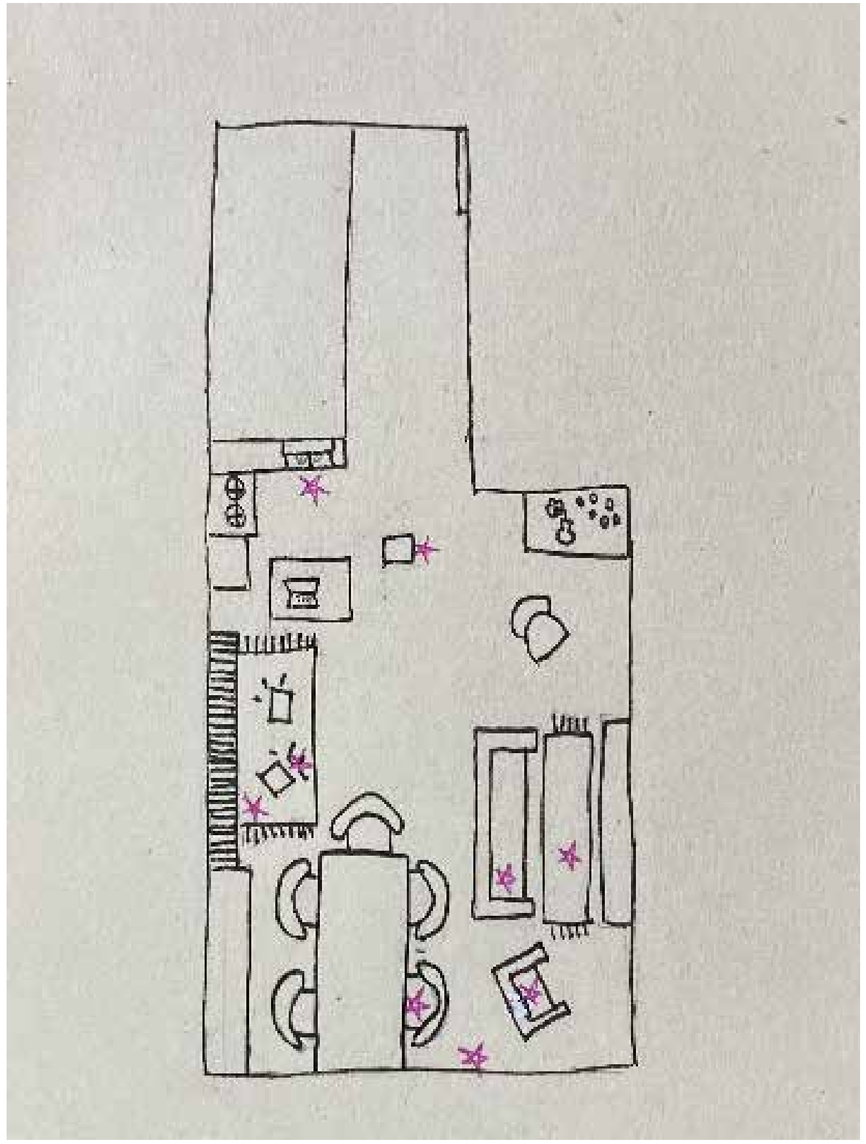

Tehran, Iran | 2025

We prepared a small party with Gelareh and invite Random People (without the level of familiarity and closeness in all gender, cultural, economic, educational situations) to this party by an invitation letter sending to them on telegram.
The Party had several factors and rules to challenged interaction, communication and being and the whole process recorded by a camera. After the party, we spent some time (2 weeks) examining and analyzing the process of the condition of individual and collective behavior of those present at the party and in relation to ourselves.
In the next weeks, we had online meeting with guests again and we asked them to share their experiences of their presence, the others, being together, communication and collaboration.
This Project was an experience that moves on the border between sociology and performance.

Live Performance Questioner-Part 1 : Home

Berlin, Germany | 2025

What do we mean when we talk about “home”?
Is home a place, a single word, a concept, a personal definition, or something more? Home has a different meaning and image for each person, reflecting their lived experience. Based on these questions, we made a live performance with Raheleh which engange audience with several datas at the same time (including photos, videos, and audio) and brings more questions about the core consept to redefine it.

Statement:

When you return home, look at your body again!
Re-examine the state you are in!
And ask yourself why you call that place home!?

No Name Performance

Tehran, Iran | 2018

Every object that connects to our body leaves an effect.
For some time I began to observe these objects: such as earrings, necklaces, ties and even bras and clothes.
What is the connection between objects and my body?
How do I redefine it and which part of its effectiveness do I accept or transfer to someone else?
Based on these questions I choreographed a dance performance with Shaghayegh Ghasemi and we performed it in Tehran.
